

Contents

iii	Acknowledgment
1	INTRODUCTION
1	Why this guidebook?
1	Simple and complex post-traumatic stress — What is the difference?
3	Goals of this guidebook
4	Who should read this guidebook?
4	Overview of this guidebook
5	A note about language
9	PART I: THE BIOLOGICAL, PSYCHOLOGICAL AND SOCIAL CONTEXTS OF TRAUMA: A CONCEPTUAL MODEL
11	1. Abuse and Trauma in Women’s Lives: Understanding Gender
13	Gender, trauma and social context
14	The impact of gendered violence and abuse in women’s lives
16	Understanding abuse and trauma developmentally
18	Sexual abuse in childhood and the effects on women’s adult sexuality
20	The limitations of traditional psychiatric diagnoses in understanding abuse-related post-traumatic stress
21	Abuse, violence and complex post-traumatic stress
25	2. Attachment Theory and Trauma
27	Attachment as the regulator of emotional arousal
29	Insecure attachment, isolation and disconnection
29	Attachment and the therapeutic relationship
31	3. Understanding How Complex Post-Traumatic Stress Gets Produced
33	The bio-psycho-social framework
34	Physiological effects: the “fight-or-flight” response
39	4. The Six Dimensions of Complex Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder
42	1. Affect dysregulation
45	2. Dissociation and changes in consciousness
48	3. Changes in self-perception
50	4. Disturbances in relationships

54 5. Somatization

55 6. Alterations in systems of meaning

57 PART II: THERAPEUTIC ESSENTIALS IN TRAUMA TREATMENT

59 5. Key Clinical Issues in Trauma Treatment

61 Why specialized training in trauma work is critical

62 Clinical challenges in working with complex post-traumatic stress responses

63 Phase-oriented post-trauma treatment

64 The critical “first phase” of trauma treatment

69 6. Diagnosing and Identifying the Need for Trauma Treatment

71 Criteria for simple post-traumatic stress disorder

73 Criteria for complex post-traumatic stress disorder

76 Formal assessment of complex post-traumatic stress

79 7. Establishing the Therapeutic Alliance

82 Collaboration

90 Validation and empathic attunement

92 Empowering clients to make changes

97 Respectful engagement / active facilitation

99 PART III: TOOLS AND STRATEGIES

101 8. The Importance of Carrying Out Psychoeducation with Clients

103 General issues of psychoeducation

105 Making the connection between childhood abuse and trauma

106 Normalization

108 The focus of psychoeducational work

111 9. Explaining Simple Post-Traumatic Stress Responses to Clients

113 Explaining trauma

114 Explaining ways of surviving trauma

116 Explaining simple post-traumatic stress responses

117 Explaining the three response clusters of simple post-traumatic stress

121 10. Explaining Complex Post-Traumatic Stress Responses to Clients

124 Explaining the dimensions of complex post-traumatic stress responses

125 Explaining affect dysregulation

129 Explaining dissociation and changes in consciousness

131 Explaining changes in self-perception

131 Explaining disturbances in relationships

133	Explaining somatization
134	Explaining alterations in systems of meaning
135	11. Working Toward Change: Therapeutic Techniques to Help Clients Manage Their Feelings and Memories
138	Collaborating with clients to manage trauma responses
139	An approach for intervening in trauma responses
141	Three steps in managing trauma responses
142	Developing a tool box
155	12. Strategies and Tools for Managing Complex Post-Traumatic Stress Responses
158	Dimension one: affect regulation strategies
169	Dimension two: dissociation and changes in consciousness
174	Dimension three: changes in self-perception
181	Dimension five: somatization
185	CONCLUSION
187	RESOURCES
189	GLOSSARY
191	REFERENCES